

Wonder and the Need for Alliances BETWEEN SCIENCE AND RELIGION

Scott F. Gilbert, PhD

Howard A. Schneiderman Professor of Biology Swarthmore College

The scientific and religious worldviews are both predicated on the experience of wonder. Indeed, in preserving wonder, science and religion actually help maintain each other. Science and religion, then, need to be allies in preserving sources of natural wonder. As long as science and religion are kept apart, profit-motive will triumph. Interestingly, both science and religion are changing in ways that can accommodate such alliances.
